

type. Fulminant acne is characterized by the presence of severe inflammatory lesions, including large, painful, hemorrhagic nodules and cysts, which are often accompanied by systemic symptoms such as fever, arthralgia, and leukocytosis. The condition is typically seen in adolescents and young adults, and it is often associated with the use of systemic corticosteroids. Systemic