

Leukonychia is a condition characterized by white patches on the nails. It can be caused by various factors, including trauma, fungal infections, and systemic diseases. The patches are typically white and irregular in shape, and they can appear on one or more nails. Leukonychia is often a temporary condition, but it can persist for several months or even years. It is important to consult a healthcare professional if you notice white patches on your nails, as it may be a sign of an underlying health problem.