

Leukonychia is a condition characterized by white patches on the nails. It can be caused by various factors, including trauma, infection, and systemic diseases. The patches are typically white and irregular in shape, and they can appear on one or more nails. Leukonychia is often a temporary condition, but it can persist for a long time if the underlying cause is not addressed.