

Prurigo Nodularis (Nodular Prurigo): also known as nodular prurigo, and may be associated with chronic urticaria, atopic dermatitis, psoriasis, eczema, and other skin conditions. It is characterized by the presence of multiple, raised, red nodules on the skin. The nodules are typically 2-5 mm in diameter and are often surrounded by a red, inflamed area. The nodules are usually located on the arms, legs, and torso. The condition is often associated with severe itching and can be difficult to treat.