

Sezary Syndrome is a type of cutaneous T-cell lymphoma. It is characterized by a severe, generalized skin eruption (erythroderma) and the presence of atypical lymphocytes (Sezary cells) in the blood and skin. The condition is often associated with itching and can lead to complications such as infections and anemia.