

CHONDRODERMATITIS is a benign, chronic, inflammatory condition of the ear, characterized by a solitary, red, nodular lesion on the helix. It is often associated with chronic sun exposure and is more common in older individuals. The lesion is typically painless but can be tender to touch. Histopathological examination shows a mixed inflammatory infiltrate within the dermis, often extending into the underlying cartilage. Treatment options include surgical excision, cryotherapy, and topical corticosteroids.