

Disseminated superficial actinic porokeratosis (DSAP) is the most common of the porokeratosis group of disorders. It is characterized by the presence of multiple, small, red, scaly lesions on sun-exposed areas of the body. The lesions are typically found on the arms and legs, and they can be associated with a variety of other skin conditions, including actinic keratosis and basal cell carcinoma.