

EPHELIDES are benign freckles that are often found on the face and neck. They are caused by an overproduction of melanin in the skin. They are most common in people with fair skin and are often inherited. They are not a sign of skin cancer and do not require treatment.