

A congenital vascular patch on the nape occurs very commonly and may persist throughout life.

Erythema is a redness of the skin caused by increased blood flow to the area. It can be a sign of many different conditions, including infection, allergy, and inflammation. Erythema is a common symptom of many skin conditions, including eczema, psoriasis, and allergic reactions. It can also be a sign of a systemic condition, such as a viral infection or a bacterial infection. Erythema is a redness of the skin caused by increased blood flow to the area. It can be a sign of many different conditions, including infection, allergy, and inflammation. Erythema is a common symptom of many skin conditions, including eczema, psoriasis, and allergic reactions. It can also be a sign of a systemic condition, such as a viral infection or a bacterial infection.