

Lichen Myxedematosus

Lichen myxedematosus, or papular mucinosis, is characterized by a more or less extensive eruption of a

In a variant of lichen myxedematosus called scleromyxedema, a generalized eruption of papules as in lichen myxedematosus is seen.

erythema are found. There is marked accentuation of the skin folds, particularly on the face. Scleromyxedema is associated with systemic sclerosis.

Multiple dome-shaped papules with histopathologic features suggestive of papular mucinosis have been Histopathology .

In lichen myxedematosus, fairly large amounts of mucin are present. In contrast with pretibial myxedema